FOREWORDS TO THE 2025 EDITION

Compiling bibliographies seems to be addictive. That has been the case with my friend, Mike Rhode, and me. My compulsion to create bibliographies goes back at least to 1965, when I did one on Philippine mass communications, based on my research on the subject during a Fulbright stint in Manila, 1964-1965. I recall proudly showing the book to my best friend, whose playful response was, "I don't read bibliographies."

After that beginning, I was helpless, churning out bibliographies on Asian mass communications, women and mass media, Caribbean mass communications, Cuban mass communications, multi volumes on comics art of every continent, others with Mike as the lead compiler, ad infinitum, or maybe, ad nauseum.

Because I am not aware of a cure, I guess I'm hooked for the rest of my days.

John A. Lent

comics research bibliography

I must confess that, when I started this project in 1996 with John Bulllough, I had no idea that I would still be working on it 30 years later, now exactly half my life. We had both assumed that it would be a crowd-sourced project (such as the Grand Comics Database that gave John the initial idea), and eventually we both would be passing it on to other people. That didn't happen obviously. Bullough moved on to other things, but I'm still working on this, guiding its metamorphosis over the years from an online database on his college website (the original logo is above), to merging with John A. Lent's print bibliography series, and including far more online citations than print ones, to publishing annual updates, either digitally or in print or both.

I don't think it ever became the research tool that we envisioned either, because most people find it easier to just use a search engine. Even a regularly updated Facebook page and daily blog posts collecting the day's citations have never gotten much traction. Although as we've seen, search engine companies cannot be trusted to put the consumers interest above their own, especially when money is at stake. Nor can you trust AI to do research for you, both because it makes up citations and people are now using it to create entire fake books that are for sale on Amazon and other large platforms. Meanwhile the media landscape continues to warp as large newspapers such as the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette go out of business rather than unionize, and the current federal government wipes out massive amounts of data from its online sites, including digital comic books from NASA.

So, in some ways the Bibliography has become a testament to articles that existed at one point and may still exist, but diligence will be needed to find them. And that's okay. I have multiple examples of this, such as when the major newspaper The Washington Post didn't properly transfer its online chats, so many chats with cartoonists disappeared except in our citations. Sometimes I can find a copy of the work that I saved to provide to a researcher who writes and asks me about them. It may seem like everything on the internet will be there forever, but that is not true. I've written a couple of papers on bibliography about the material that's already disappeared or is at risk of it. A lot of the internet depends on large corporations not changing things. If Google suddenly decided to no longer support YouTube, thousands (probably tens of thousands, maybe even hundreds of thousands) of videos on comic art would disappear. If the Internet Archive disappears along with its Wayback Machine similarly tens of thousands of materials on comics would disappear. This was a real possibility and may still be since major publishers sued them for damages after actions the Archive took during COVID-19.

So, why do I keep doing it? Well, bibliography gets in your blood. In real life, I'm a professional archivist, and used to preserving information and answering questions for researchers. That tendency has carried over into my personal hobbies and is a way I can give back to the field I've loved since I was a child… before anything much like comics scholarship existed beyond the fan community. Which to be sure, is owed much more credit than it is currently given for preserving the history of the various comic art fields. And I get to work along with John Lent, a titan in the field, and continue his vision, while adding to it for modern comic arts such as webcomics. Whenever someone pops up to help, such as my indispensable co-editor Tony Rose, everything about the project becomes exciting again. As a formatter, Tony corrected hundreds of pages of citations over the past few years, and in 2025 he additionally focused on getting citations of Indigenous peoples and the 1920s Editor and Publisher.

And finally I can see some real progress in working through our backlog. This past December, for the first time, we started using AI (specifically Google's Gemini) to process and format our backlog of citations, which is literally thousands of pages. We need to check every citation against our original notes, but it is speeding up the process immensely. Thus, also for the first time, all of one year's collected citations have been formatted, if not included in the main bibliography. Everything we found in 2025 (which isn't remotely everything that was published in the year nor should it be) is now either in the Bibliography under a related topic, or is in the searchable Addenda ebook.

I don't anticipate working another 30 years on this project, but I'm glad to put out this issue commemorating John A. Lent's 90th birth year. As usual, it is available for free on the Internet Archive, but I would encourage people and institutions to consider buying the print version, which should appear in early Spring.

Mike Rhode

INTRODUCTION

The Comics Research Bibliography (CRB) began as an online resource in 1996. John Bullough, struck by the success of the Grand Comics Database crowd-sourcing project, proposed a companion project of a compilation of works about comics. Michael Rhode was the only member to join him in compiling an online Comics Research Bibliography. Bullough selected a citation format and created a web interface hosted on his school's server. Both Bullough and Rhode contributed citations, from their local newspapers and collections, especially from Rhode's books and magazines. They were unaware of Dr. John Lent's similar project which he had started for an academic publisher.

Once updates to the online version stopped in 2009 (and the site is now defunct), Rhode decided to irregularly produce print and electronic versions to fill the gap. He and Lent had begun working together on the International Journal of Comic Art, and at the conclusion of Lent's publishing contract, they began sharing bibliographic data. In 2023, Tony Rose, a long-time Grand Comics Database contributor, joined the team and has processed thousands of citations.

Five print versions have appeared as International Journal of Comic Art Volume 11, Number 3 (626 pages) and print-on-demand Comics Research Bibliography, 2012 (two volumes, 832 pp.), 2018 (two volumes, 1253 pp.), 2022 (two volumes, 1444 pp.), and 2023 (two volumes, 1535 pp.); and various editions as free e-books: CRB, 1996-2009 (1548 pages, reproducing the original Bullough & Rhode online version), 2012, 2018, 2020 (1324 pp.), 2022, 2023, and 2024 (1627 pp).

This bibliography is always a work in progress – the authors literally have thousands of additional citations waiting to be formatted and included. The number of articles have greatly increased owing to the growing acceptance of comic art as a subject of interest and the simultaneous growth of the internet. Daily listings of articles can be found on Rhode's ComicsDC blog at https://comicsdc.blogspot.com/search?q=%22Comics+research+bibliography%22&max-results=20&by-date=true.

It is hoped that the CRB is acting as a quality filter by only citing substantive articles or interviews from the web. At one time, typing 'Fantagraphics' into Google's search engine returned almost 3 million results. If you look at the Fantagraphics entry here, you will find far fewer entries, but they will be substantive pieces on the company that will be useful for research.

NOTES ON USE

This bibliography is best used in conjunction with Dr. John Lent's 10-volume set of Comic Art Bibliography; Rhode & Bullough's original online Comics Research Bibliography (1996-2009) at https://web.archive.org/web/20210420235502/http://homepages.rpi.edu/~bulloj/comxbib.html or https://archive.org/details/comics-research-bibliography-1996-2009-final (because not all citations there have been added here yet); Joachim Trinkwitz's Bonn Online Bibliography of Comics Research at https://www.bobc.uni-bonn.de/ ; ICAF Comics Studies Bibliography (2018-) by Andrew Kunka et. al.; at http://www.internationalcomicartsforum.org/comics-studies-bibliography.html ; Orrin Scott's Animation History Bibliography at https://cartoonresearch.com/index.php/the-animation-history-bibliography/ ; and Randy Scott's Index to and List of the Comic Art Collection at https://comics.lib.msu.edu/rri/index.htm . It is not feasible to duplicate efforts, and it would not be desirable either as all of these bibliographies have different aims and focuses.

Subject headings of the CRB are derived from Lent Comic Art Classification System with modifications by Rhode, which are in italics. While it is undoubtedly faster and easier to search the PDF of the CRB for specific words, it is worthwhile to spend a bit of time going over the Lent's system, available online as an e-book or from Lulu.com as a print-on-demand book. While at first glance the Classification System may seem arcane or unnecessarily difficult, it is a classification system and by its very nature, is highly technical. The process of making the Lent system the basis for the CRB was as follows: Rhode pulled Lent's arrangement schema out of his books, creating ten documents, then merged the classification terms back into one document, and began populating it with new material, creating new subheads as necessary.

Some subject headings that were carried over from Lent are empty here. An asterisk (*) marks entries or articles that are new since the last published version – 1,701 of them. ~~Struck-through~~ headings were mis-placed in Lent and are placed in their proper location here. They are retained here to point to possible data in one of Lent's earlier volumes. The empty subheadings are hold-overs from Lent. If there is a blank entry in this version of the CRB, then there is some entry in one of Lent's print volumes that might be useful to the researcher. Underlined headings were mis-placed in earlier versions of this bibliography and have been relocated.

Topics with fewer entries than necessary for a heading are found as close to alphabetically as possible, i.e. a cartoonist whose last name starts with 'B,' with only one or two entries, will be found in the A-C section of the heading CARTOONISTS AND THEIR WORKS, not in the general section.

For Global (or world-wide) articles, see the section before the Europe heading.

Traditionally, Mac and Mc precede Ma in author headings and that is how Lent listed them in his books; however here they are arranged as a computer would sort them – Ma, Mac, Mc. This arrangement is in transition, and will eventually be replaced by the computer order.

Parenthetical information, marked with square brackets ([ ]) has been added by the compilers as tags for computer searches.

For material on DC and Marvel 'Universes' see COMIC BOOK – CONTENT, FORM – Genres – Superhero. For information on their media universes, see MEDIA, POPULAR CULTURE CONNECTIONS - Movies, films.

As anime and manga have spread worldwide, headings for these can be found under countries other than Japan. In the US, 'anime' is under ANIMATION – Genres & Types – Anime.

Webcomics or internet comics have a new upper level section (3a. Web Comics, webcomics), after formerly being a subheading under COMIC BOOKS - TECHNICAL AND TECHNOLOGICAL ASPECTS. As of 2024, we will attempt to use the Eisner Award definitions of "'Digital comics' are complete issues of comics or graphic novels that are available for online viewing or for download. 'Webcomics' are comics stories that are serialized online (such as a daily or weekly) and/or that use formats other than the traditional comic book page and take advantage of being online (horizontal, scrolled, etc.)."

Citations for CGI Animation were included in the early years of the technology, but as it has become a mature technology used in every large film, it is no longer tracked here, nor are movies with a significant component of CGI unless they mimic traditional animation styles. Similarly, videogame animation should fit in this bibliography but has simply become too large a field to be covered here, although some citations are included.

If a book is by a single cartoonist, it is usually cited under that cartoonist's name rather than the book's title. For example, see Clowes, Daniel for Ghost World. A cartoonist may be included in the country of one's birth, but also might be found in one's adopted country, or under the listing for the country that one's work is most associated with. We've tried to provide cross-references in these cases.

If an Internet link no longer works, try the Internet Archive at https://www.archive.org to see if a version of it was captured and stored. When a link is prefaced with 'Online at…' one can assume a version also appeared in print, possibly with a different title and/or content. If the title is followed, by "In print as…" that means the online version appeared first, and was later followed by a print version.

For the 2022 electronic edition, scores of entries were added under a heading of "Cartooning, Cartoons (Lent's unarranged citations)" because in 2012, Lent provided 35 pages of citations, arranged only by either country or super-heading such as animation. For years, Rhode held off adding these barely-categorized entries until he finally realized that moving from print-only editions permit these citations to be searchable, even if they are not under a subcategory such as cartoonist, title, or character. These will eventually be parceled back into the correct subheading, but not in the foreseeable future. We apologize to our print-only readers.

Obviously, there are scores, or hundreds or thousands of entries that could be included but aren't yet. This project, like any type of bibliographic description of a living field, needs to grow and change on a daily basis. Future editions will include new listings with new creators and new characters, and probably entirely new categories for those listings to be nested under. In the meantime, we hope that this bibliography may be of use in researching the wide scope of comic art.
